Opening of the personal care centre in Lyon.

Tout ce qui est
humain est
notre.
2019 will remain forever a very special year in the history of the Secours populaire.

Julien Lauprêtre, President and Founder of the Secours populaire, continued persevering to pursue the association’s global reach right up to the moment when he drew his last breath. He gave his full support to the development of the “copain du Monde” children’s village initiative because he saw it as the definition of solidarity: be attentive to others, give and receive unconditionally, and recognise solidarity in humanity by providing the stepping stones to meaningful action. This solidarity could then be set in motion in France, Europe and around the world, in the form of support and financial resources, both independently and with respect for others, keeping dignity firmly in place. Everyone involved in the Secours populaire, all around France and even further afield, shared this same goal and decided that the path Julien Lauprêtre had forged should be followed and widened. The association calls upon all individuals to contribute however they can to roll back misfortune and recognise each person’s ability to improve the condition of men, women and children, all around France, Europe and the rest of the world, both at home and abroad, refusing that others should decide their fate and provoke widespread disaster. For the SPF, that means “influencing the consequences of catastrophes” without questioning or judging their causes. The association has never brought judgement or opinion on cause, and leaves individuals free to form their own views, providing they do not speak in the name of the SPF. That also means calling upon every person, wherever they are, to donate funds, because those resources are what allows the association to remain independent. It also means offering constructive solutions to those in need, so that they can escape poverty and become productive members of society, wherever they may be. It means helping those in authority to deal with these situations head-on, create the conditions required to build the future so that everyone can become active players and ensure the effectiveness of propositions and initiatives. I would like to thank all of you, and let’s keep up the good work.

The Secours populaire and its work during 2019.

The association’s strength lies in its independence from political, philosophical or religious influence, its decentralised and local organisation, and the commitment and initiative shown by each of its 80,000 facilitators-collectors-volunteers. These three fundamental elements in the life of the association are brought together within 656 local committees and 97 departmental federations, in addition to the many branches located in villages, neighbourhoods, communities, institutions and companies. The Secours populaire has very strong governance with almost 10,000 leaders, from local committees to the National Committee. The characteristic democracy of the Secours populaire was clearly evident in 2019, when the association held its 37th National Congress in Perpignan. One thousand delegates and guests attended, including “copain du Monde” children and SPF partners from all over the world, who declared their commitment to “Worldwide and universal solidarity, today and in the future”. They decided to bring a global element to all the association’s initiatives, breaking through borders and sharing solidarity unconditionally. That means motivating as many people as possible, by building bridges between food aid and other forms of solidarity, by taking into account issues regarding sustainable solidarity development and by speaking out for those whose voices are not heard. After working together to determine the direction the organisation will be taking, all the committees and federations of the SPF were suddenly faced with the catastrophic COVID-19 crisis. The SPF began turning its words into actions. The “Médecins du SPF” doctors sprung into unprecedented action without delay and the population of our country, as well as the countries in which our partner organisations work, supported and continue to support our association. We remained active, we “stayed the course” and called upon the generosity in terms of both financial resources and time, of anyone who could lend a hand. This was a wonderful tribute to Julien Lauprêtre and his flawless dedication to our motto: “Human issues are our issues.”
Highlights

Throughout the year, Secours Populaire volunteers have carried out countless solidarity projects to help the poor in France and around the world.

A galette workshop for children
On 4 January, pastry chef Nina Métayer ran a galette des rois workshop for six children who were enrolled in the Secours populaire school and educational support programme in Paris. They went to one of the capital’s bakeries and got some useful advice from the “Best pastry chef of the year 2017” according to the Gault and Millau guide.

Launch of the 2019 Don’actions campaign
On 12 January, the Secours populaire launched Don’actions, its major annual fundraising campaign. To mark the occasion, hundreds of volunteers took to the streets of Agen, Rouen, Nice, Paris and other places around the country to collect donations from the public.

Grand Froid (cold weather) emergency
A cold snap hit France and triggered the Grand Froid cold weather solidarity programme in 22 departments. The Secours populaire immediately stepped up its actions, coming to the aid of poorly housed and homeless people who are the first victims of severe weather conditions.
The Secours populaire is still working with the victims of the Rue d’Aubagne

Three months after the tragedy that took place in Rue d’Aubagne, Marseille, where a building collapsed and several others had to be evacuated, the Secours populaire is still working with the families who were affected. Through the generosity of the public and local partners, nearly €10,000 was collected to support them.

Grand débat national (major national debate): how to be a mouthpiece for the most disadvantaged

As part of the Grand débat national, the Secours populaire decided to invite everyone in the association to act as representatives for its volunteers, and the nation’s poorest people. Just as it had in 1989 to mark the bicentenary of the French Revolution, the SPF published its cahiers de doléances (books of grievances). Volunteers everywhere were called upon to be the mouthpiece for those who are never heard.

Keen‘V raises the roof at Lille’s Zenith

For the 25th edition of the Zénith de la solidarité, 5,000 people who have received support from the Secours populaire were invited to the Zénith in Lille for an incredible concert. This year, the event was headlined by Keen‘V, much to the delight of both young and old.

Maintaining European food aid

Two months before the MEP elections, the associations that distribute European food aid in France and other EU countries, including the Secours populaire, organised a roundtable discussion on Wednesday 20 March at the European Parliament in Brussels, determined to underline how important the programme is for its beneficiaries.

A deadly cyclone in Mozambique

Cyclone Idai wreaked devastation in Mozambique. The Secours populaire immediately sprung into action to help the thousands of people who were affected. A group of people from the association travelled to the area, along with its partners from the Philippines (Mirasol) and Madagascar (CSM). Water filters were handed out with help from the SPF’s Mozambican partner. A fine example of how solidarity has gone global!
300 Easter egg hunts in France
In April, the Secours populaire organised nearly 300 egg hunts throughout France. As part of the Printemps de la solidarité mondiale (global solidarity spring), these days of celebration are designed to raise funds for the association’s projects in almost 80 countries.

Cyclone Kenneth hits the Comoros
Tropical Cyclone Kenneth hit the Comoros on the night of 24-25 April, causing hundreds of injuries and displacing nearly 20,000 people. The Secours populaire launched an appeal for generosity to provide support for the victims of this natural disaster.

Death of Julien Lauprêtre, President of the Secours populaire français
On 26 April, Julien Lauprêtre, President of the Secours populaire, passed away at the age of 93. For all the members of the association, his passing marks the loss of a friend, as well as a president. Julien spent his entire life refusing what he found unacceptable: poverty and injustice. He made solidarity his daily fight, and he turned the Secours populaire into an important movement for popular solidarity.

Launch of the holiday campaign
250 people from the Ile-de-France region gathered at the Gare de Lyon on 30 April to embark on the holiday train. They were bound for Narbonne-Plage in the Aude department of France for six days of relaxation. On their arrival, they met with 250 people from the Occitanie region. This first departure marked the launch of the Secours populaire holiday campaign.
May

Donnez à lire (Donate to read) for children

In partnership with the Syndicat de la librairie française, the Secours populaire led its Donnez à lire (Donate to read) campaign, which involved collecting books for children. Following up on the initiative, volunteers organised a meeting in Lyon between the children and a bookshop, so that they could discuss their favourite books.

A mission for flood victims in Iran

Following the devastating floods in March, a delegation from the Secours populaire went to the province of Khuzestan in southwestern Iran. Working with its partner, the Iranian Red Cross, the SPF handed out food packages and school supplies to affected families.

SAXOPRINT Creative Awards

Secours populaire was the partner association for the 2019 SAXOPRINT Creative Awards, which is a competition to create an advertising campaign for a humanitarian cause. Six campaigns were chosen based on the theme of child poverty in the world, and the campaigns will be broadcast at key times between 2019 and 2020.

June

Young Parisians discover mountaineering

From 6 to 10 June, ten young Parisians were able to discover the joys of mountaineering. They were invited to enjoy an amazing trip to the Alps. The programme involved exploring the sea of ice, hiking on a glacier, spending a night in a refuge and climbing to a summit of 3,450 metres.

Solidarity partners club meeting

About thirty representatives from Secours populaire partner companies and foundations gathered at the Au Bal venue for the annual meeting of the association’s solidarity partners club. It was an opportunity for the association to thank them for their support, inform them about what challenges the association is facing and share details about current and future projects.

Boîtes à bonheur (Cans for happiness) project

For the 14th edition of the Boîtes à bonheur (Cans for happiness) campaign, €632,794 was collected for the Secours populaire. This action, which was carried out in partnership with Carrefour and the canning industry, helps to fund the Journées des oubliés des vacances holiday programme, which is run in August for people who cannot go on holiday during the summer.

National tribute to Julien Lauprêtre

Thousands of messages were received after the announcement that Julien Lauprêtre, President of Secours populaire, had passed away. Volunteers, people who had received support, political and public figures, and members of the public all wanted to celebrate the commitment of a man who dedicated his life to supporting the most disadvantaged. On 2 May, hundreds of people from all over France gathered at the Hôtel de Ville in Paris to pay him a final tribute.

Les Journées des oubliés des vacances celebrates its 40-year anniversary
To mark the occasion, 50 magical days were organised throughout France for 50,000 people. Children, parents, young people or seniors who couldn’t manage to go on holiday during the summer were able to enjoy an unforgettable day at the seaside, in the mountains, or at the zoo...

Copain du Monde children’s holiday villages in France and around the world
Throughout the summer, 34 copain du Monde children’s holiday villages were organised in France, Europe and around the world. These villages are an opportunity for children from all different backgrounds to get together and build projects to help others.

400 seniors at the Banquet des cheveux blancs (Pensioners’ banquet)

After a cruise on the Seine and Marne rivers, they had lunch and partook in a little dancing Chez Gégène, the famous guinguette dance venue at Joinville-le-Pont. For many of the people it was an opportunity to escape isolation, and the only holiday day in the year.
Release of the 13th Ipsos – Secours populaire barometer
On 12 September, the Secours populaire launched its Pauvreté-Précarité (Poverty-instability) campaign. It was an opportunity for the association to unveil its 13th barometer, produced with Ipsos, which this year focuses on how children perceive poverty.

Bahamas emergency
In early September, Category 5 Hurricane Dorian ripped through the Bahamas. From 6 September, a Secours populaire delegation with partners from Saint Martin and Guadeloupe, went to the area to assess needs and provide emergency assistance to the population. Emergency packages and water filters were also distributed to the victims.

Support for families at the start of the school year
Every year, the return to school is a real financial headache for families in difficulty. Volunteers from the Secours populaire stepped up during this period and organised collections of supplies so that these children could start the year with the equipment they needed.
Screening of the documentary Gosses de France (Kids from France)

On 8 October, France 2 broadcast the documentary Gosses de France (Kids from France), directed by Andrea Rawlins-Gaston, which deals with child poverty and was released one month before the 30th anniversary of the International Convention on the Rights of the Child. The film features Benjamin, a child who receives support from the Secours populaire.

Solidarity with the Kurds

In October, the Turkish army attacked Syrian Kurdistan, threatening 3.5 million children, women and men who were all forced to flee to Iraqi Kurdistan. Faced with this catastrophic situation, the Secours populaire launched an appeal for solidarity to meet the most urgent needs of the displaced families.

Departmental conferences and congresses

After the Local Committees’ Annual General Meetings in all the departments of France, volunteers from the federations of the Secours populaire met for their departmental Conferences and Congresses. These events provided the opportunity to take stock of the actions, define future directions and elect directors and delegates to the National Congress.

Boards to be solidaire

The Boards to be solidaire operation was held in Paris for the second year. More than a hundred street artists produced works on 130 boards, which were then auctioned off to raise funds for the Île-de-France federations of the Secours populaire. The operation raised €122,000.

37th National Congress of the Secours populaire

1,200 delegates from Secours populaire, copain du Monde children and partner associations from five continents met in Perpignan for the SPF’s 37th National Congress, whose theme was “Worldwide and universal solidarity, now and in the future”. For three days, they shared experiences and best practices, to develop a collective response to the tragic situations that hundreds of millions of human beings are facing. The association’s national leaders were elected for their two-year terms.

30th anniversary of the International Convention on the Rights of the Child

On 20 November 1989, the International Convention on the Rights of the Child was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly. Thirty years later, too many children are still suffering from abuse and do not benefit from their rights. The Secours populaire works daily to ensure that these rights are applied in our society.

Launch of the Pères Noël verts (Green Father Christmas) campaign

On 20 December in Paris, 5,000 people from all over France were invited to a preview of the Phénix circus show. This early celebration was shared with around fifty sponsors of the Secours populaire, who came to show their continued support for the association.

On 1 December, the seventh edition of Secours pop’Rocks was held at the Bataclan concert venue in Paris. The event was a fundraising concert to benefit of the Ile-de-France federations of the Secours populaire. 1,600 people flocked to see Hocus Pocus, the headliner at the event.

Digital Pères Noël verts (Green Father Christmas) campaign

The Secours populaire launched a TV and digital campaign for Christmas to raise public awareness of the impact that poverty can have at this time. The film was produced by Publicis Conseil and Prodigious.

Celebration event with the Pères Noël verts (Green Father Christmas) at the Musée des arts forains (Museum of fairground arts)

The Secours populaire organised its end-of-year celebrations event at the Musée des arts forains (Museum of fairground arts) in Paris. It was a wonderful opportunity to bring together the association’s sponsors and partners. A fashion show was even organised featuring people who had received support from the Secours populaire.

The Secours populaire français is an association that promotes general and worldwide solidarity, and goodwill for all people.

For 74 years now, the Secours populaire has been motivating men, women, young people and children (through its copain du Monde initiative) to join its movement, encouraging them to translate the word “solidarity” into concrete action. As our founding president, Julien Lauprêtre, once said, solidarity is a barrier against the evils of hatred and racism.

Throughout France, our decentralised organisation made up of federations, committees and branches, brings the association’s collectors-leaders-volunteers as close as possible to those in need, helping them resolve difficulties, free of received ideas or conditions.

In addition to providing emergency food, clothing and material aid, the association works to facilitate access to rights, education, health, culture, leisure and sports. This general solidarity towards the victims of instability in France, Europe and all over the world, along with our network of partners spread over various continents, is intended to emancipate each individual, through popular education, in their daily lives. To fund this solidarity, Secours populaire volunteers collect funds, develop partnerships, and grow the association’s solidarity network a little more each day. In doing so, they guarantee that its actions remain independent, so that the SPF can be a genuine “advocate for the poor”, as well as a “goad to public authorities”.

Each volunteer is a spokesperson for the association and invited to take part in management and decision-making by joining its governing bodies, especially during general assemblies and congresses, and/or by becoming an elected leader. The Secours populaire’s mission is to bring to life its motto: “human issues are our issues.”

Let’s keep on building and maintaining bridges of solidarity between France and its overseas territories.

In a world in which climate and healthcare challenges, racism, xenophobia and the rejection of others are raging, it is more crucial than ever to take action and develop solidarity, all over the globe, including in the French overseas territories. We step up during emergencies, but the association also works on sustainable development projects, investigating and anticipating the needs of the people who have been affected. We extend our solidarity by identifying local partners, associations and institutions, tackling climate challenges and responding to situations of instability and poverty that affect a large part of the population. We took some huge steps forward in 2019 throughout the overseas territories. School support, cooking workshops, music workshops, resumption of fishing for sailors, reconstruction of living quarters, a copain du Monde children’s village, housing refurbishments, etc.

Taking solidarity global does not just mean providing aid in foreign countries, it means erasing borders and multiplying our actions overseas.

Raising awareness about the need to act, encouraging public initiatives and developing copain du Monde children’s villages are part and parcel of 21st century solidarity. Let’s keep on building and maintaining sustainable bridges of solidarity between France and its overseas territories.

Volunteer in Privas

I realised that as well as the joy of giving and sharing, volunteering gives me enormous energy. You need to love people, otherwise you may as well do something else.

In Ardèche, tutoring courses have been set up to help pupils in difficulty and support them as they learn the French language.

Angèle
Volunteer in Cherbourg

What I like about volunteering is that I get the chance to put a smile on the faces of people in challenging situations.

In the Manche federation, young Secours populaire volunteers are taking action to provide support for people in unstable situations.

Ahmed
Copains du Monde child

For me, the word “solidarity” means being kind to each other, loving each other and trusting one another, being united for a better future.

During the celebrations to mark the 30th anniversary of the International Convention on the Rights of the Child, the Secours populaire encouraged the youngest participants to show solidarity and join its copain du Monde movement of volunteer children.
Unswerving commitment that brings hope.

In the village that is our world, where every catastrophe, every disaster, every form of suffering, every situation of poverty, but also every success and every positive event can make the news in just a few moments on social media, we have chosen to show solidarity because we believe it is truly universal. Whether that solidarity comes from by the volunteer collectors-facilitators of the Secours populaire français in our country or elsewhere on the planet to help, relieve, guide or encourage men, women, children, our human brothers, solidarity is expressed (...). Promoting that solidarity is a considerable responsibility. It is just as important as facing the challenges of our modern world.” These words were spoken by Henriette Steinberg, Secretary General of the Secours populaire, when she addressed the delegates at the most recent national congress. Since then, thousands of new volunteers have come forward to lend a hand. They all spread the universal value of solidarity through sharing. Everyone makes their own contribution, whether they are copain du Monde children, young people or adults. Each person takes action in their own way, ensuring they show respect for others and are open to the world around them. The constant commitment from 80,000 SPF facilitators-collectors-volunteers brings hope for a better world and builds solidarity.

“Since then, thousands of new volunteers have come forward to lend a hand.”

Training institute

The Secours populaire training institute supports the movement and its players, to bring the association's plans to fruition. Since it was founded, more than 48,000 people have taken training courses. There are around thirty courses available, and they have been designed with the same objective: to support those involved with the movement as they carry out their initiatives. Training sessions, as well as public seminars, theme days, symposia, group action-research workshops and so on increase the quality of solidarity, and strengthen the development of the association's financial resources and its progress as a whole. Training also brings opportunities to share, discuss and really look at what impact our actions can have. During the training courses, each volunteer becomes an active collector and an enlightened citizen who is aware of the identity of the Secours populaire and can defend its independence and its strategy.
Partners

Allow everyone access to rights

The Ministry of Justice and the Secours populaire have formed a partnership that aims to help impoverished people gain access to justice and rights through the SPF’s PASS (welcome, solidarity and healthcare support) centres. The goal of the project is to bring justice to those answerable to the law who experience exclusion and vulnerability, and help them gain a better understanding of their rights. When necessary, it also provides access to specialist organisations and legal aid, as well as mediation and arbitration services to ensure their rights are exercised properly.

Boîte à bonheur project (Happiness box)

Since 2006, the Secours populaire and Carrefour have been running the Boîte à bonheur (Happiness box) project with ten companies from the food canning industry. From 15 January to 10 February, 7% of the sales from canned goods by 13 brands sold in the group’s stores went to the Secours populaire to fund the Journées des oubliés des vacances holiday initiative. In 2019, the campaign raised €632,794, and allowed 50,000 children to experience the delight of taking a holiday.

Jean-Benoît Dujol
Director for youth, popular education and associations, with the French Ministry of Education and Youth

“We are proud to have supported the work of the Secours populaire for many years such as its “copain du Monde” children’s village movement, which helps to get young people involved in its initiatives and volunteer work generally, and encourages children to be players for solidarity.”

Jade Declercq
Product Manager for Feminine Hygiene, Southern Europe & France, VANIA

“Vania® decided to join forces with the Secours populaire to combat period poverty and support women in need by donating two million menstrual pads in 2019.”
Working better together as partners.

The Secours populaire’s primary resources are obviously its volunteers and donors. Nothing is possible without them. The second category includes the much valued companies and foundations which support us in every single project we undertake, every action we drive. From the neighbourhood mini-market which sets aside food to improve the choices available to people who receive assistance, to the large foundation which finances long-term social, cultural or sports projects, the Secours populaire works with a wide range of donors and supporters. We foster long-term relationships with these organisations, which means we secure the commitment of our volunteers. Initiating a project is much easier when you have the regular support of a company or foundation, one you can trust to satisfy your requests no matter what the situation. These relationships are especially strong because social and environmental responsibility issues have become crucial for many of these companies, and we provide a way for them to take meaningful action. We are proud to be able to help. Other essential partners in our daily actions are local communities, major public services, popular education associations, and so on. We work with them and share objectives and cultures. Here too, the content of our partnerships varies enormously: from loaning premises at the foot of a social housing project building to cover areas that don’t receive subsidies, through the joint organisation of holiday projects or magical Christmas evening events. Our common objective with these institutions is to fight against social, territorial and economic discrimination while focusing on popular education. Our work is driven by this goal, and we always respect the independence of the Secours populaire so that social ties are maintained in the hope of a brighter future.

"The Secours populaire works with a wide range of donors and supporters."

Our actions in France

The Secours populaire supports people suffering from poverty in all its forms.
© Pascal Montary / SPF
There are almost 9 million poor people in France, including 3 million children.

In 2019, we celebrated the 30th anniversary of the International Convention on the Rights of the Child. While much progress has already been made, children are still the first victims of increasing poverty and deteriorating social conditions. Nearly 3 million children still live below the poverty line in France today. And they count for 41% of the people who receive the association’s help. Every day, the SPF takes action to show its solidarity so that these children can enjoy their childhood to the full and take opportunities to improve their future. Where there are children, there are of course parents, often single women, who have to find the strength to take care of their children each day. We have noticed that it’s a similar story everywhere. Whether in towns, suburbs or rural areas, whether students, low-income workers, retired people, single-parent households, unaccompanied foreign minors, people on a migrant journey, anyone who comes to the association is welcomed, supported and guided, all throughout the year.

Providing solutions to ever more complex and growing needs now means we really have to step up our solidarity: food aid, clothing, professional integration, access to personal care products, healthcare, education, common rights, holidays, culture, sport, leisure, digital technology, etc.

Our solidarity is based on some essential and indissociable principles:
- Our welcome is unconditional.
- We take into account each person’s overall situation.
- We show general solidarity.
- We allow the people we welcome to assert their independence through volunteering.

So because someone has listened to them, taken them seriously and guided them, the people who approach the Secours populaire for support stay active and decisive in their lives and their future.

Refugee-migrants

The road paved with danger.

Whether they come from Congo, Sudan, Senegal, Mali, Moldova, Iraq, Tibet, Afghanistan, Morocco or any other country, people are fleeing war, dictatorship, misery, famine, a lack of freedom and, soon, climate disasters caused by global warming.

They arrive in Europe and France often after risking their lives at sea on fragile boats and realise, too late, that Europe is not the El Dorado they imagined. They most often end up in detention centres before being released onto the streets and finding themselves in makeshift squats or slums by ring roads, from which they are regularly expelled to be sent to various accommodation centres around France, where they are then sorted into those who can apply for asylum and others who can expect to be sent home.

Given this dreadful situation, which is very much ongoing, the Secours populaire, true to its tradition of solidarity, provides unconditional support to all these men, women and children. This support might be in the form of food, clothing, health, leisure or anything related to learning French, providing assistance with residence permits, as well as administrative procedures which are becoming more complicated. In these situations our motto, “Human issues are our issues”, takes on its full meaning.

Playing together to break through prejudices about refugee-migrants.

In Perpignan, the Secours populaire has set up an education centre in which French courses for adult refugee-migrants are run by volunteers. It’s a great way to help people who do not speak the language to integrate society and gain autonomy. During these workshops, both the people receiving support and the volunteers themselves realised that there were still certain prejudices about the situation of refugee-migrants. The refugee-migrants had the idea of creating a giant board game about the rights of foreigners in France, to raise awareness about their situation and break down prejudices in a fun way.

Our actions
France

The Secours populaire has always stepped up to meet the needs of victims in emergency situations.

Fires, floods, natural disasters... When emergency situations occur, upheaval and fear put everyone on the same footing, and solidarity is crucial. Whatever the trauma, the Secours populaire provides various forms of emergency first aid to meet different needs: food, access to drinking water, clothing and equipment; all essential forms of support to help people to go on with their lives. The Secours populaire also guides families in accessing their rights so that they can recover their dignity as quickly as possible. Because these emergency situations are tragic for everyone involved, especially the most vulnerable, the association takes action and coordinates with its network of players, its volunteer fundraisers, donors, private and corporate partners to develop solidarity. Our association in France is decentralised, which allows us to take action right in the heart of emergency situations and get close to victims. Once the initial emergency is over, disaster victims too often find themselves alone. SPF volunteers stay with families to provide long-term support. We now need to grow our network as far as possible, financially, materially, and in terms of our human resources, and plan for potential emergencies with our response fund to take quick and effective action to show solidarity.
When the Secours populaire is called to help, we show up. It is an integral part of who we are, solidarity isn’t just a meaningless word.

In action

Solidarity with the victims of Teil.

On 11 November, an earthquake of unprecedented severity shook the Ardèche and Drôme departments of France. Reaching a magnitude of 5.4 on the Richter scale, the earthquake was most devastating in Le Teil, a town with 8,400 inhabitants, and 2,000 of them were affected by the catastrophe. Given the enormity of the damage the Secours populaire took immediate action. Immediate emergency aid in the form of clothing, furniture and household appliances was provided from the very beginning, and initiatives were organised by Secours populaire volunteers, donors and partner companies. After the first emergencies had been tackled, the association stayed to help, and is still working there today to support families affected by the earthquake. For example, a day at Disneyland Paris was organised for a group of children and their parents. It was an opportunity for the residents to escape from their everyday challenges and leave the traumatic experience behind them.
Food aid

A gateway to more solidarity.

People who really need solidarity often come to us because they have an primary urgent requirement: food. Secours populaire volunteers work year round to provide this support. It is organised as self-service solidarity. People in need make a symbolic financial donation, then they can choose what they would like to eat. A financial transaction and a choice are essential for people to maintain their dignity and make decisions about their own diets.

The products carried by the Secours populaire come from several sources: collections at large and medium-sized stores, shopping cart campaigns with supermarket customers run by association volunteers, donations and the Fund for European Aid to the Most Deprived (FEAD). The FEAD covers 45% of the food that the association distributes and is essential on two levels: it allows impoverished people to feed themselves, and it helps to build a united Europe that shows solidarity to its citizens.

Lastly, as they provide food, the Secours populaire teams get an opportunity to create a relationship of trust with the people they support. The association often begins supporting people in this way. It strives constantly to reduce poverty and instability, however it can and by any means available.
In the past, I focused on surviving before eating. I paid for everything I had to and I stopped eating. This support has been a huge help!

A bakery workshop for children in Angers.

At Secours populaire, food aid doesn't stop at distribution. Taking a popular education approach, the volunteers attach particular importance to nutrition, a balanced diet, and the quality of the products that are distributed in free food services. As such, the Secours populaire federation in Maine-et-Loire has been running cooking workshops for children for four years, including a bakery workshop. On 29 May in Angers, they were invited to visit the bakery at the Chambre des métiers, where apprentices passed on their knowledge. This partnership went beyond the workshop, because the apprentices made chocolate eggs for the Egg Hunt in Anger, and even made marzipan galettes for the people and volunteers at the centre.
We welcome all people into our structures unconditionally as part of an orientation and support process, ensuring that everyone has access to fundamental, social and legal rights.

The people who come to our welcome, solidarity and healthcare support centres (PASS) sometimes have urgent needs. Our volunteers are always there to listen so they can take stock of their situation, and most importantly ensure that they have access to their rights: housing, health, financial assistance, etc. Because we know all too well that administrative and legal procedures can be a real challenge. They are mostly all now digital, so the procedures are very difficult for those who do not have access to a computer or an Internet connection. Not to mention people who speak little or no French and who find themselves totally helpless when attempting to deal with administrative issues. Drawing on their united network of professionals and partners, the Secours populaire volunteers guide the most vulnerable people through the process that will grant them access to fundamental rights. Themed events, specific training and documentary resources are tools used to improve their understanding of various situations and effectively direct people to the appropriate services, keeping the objective of autonomy and respect for dignity for all at the forefront.
I am a volunteer at the reception centre for unaccompanied foreign minors. My main tasks are to provide administrative support for these young people and help them access their rights.

A legal clinic in Brest.

Knowing and asserting your rights can be a real challenge for people in unstable situations. A lack of information, resources, administrative hoop-jumping... these are all obstacles that are difficult to overcome. To help tackle these thorny issues, the Secours populaire federation in Finistère has formed a partnership with the University of Western Brittany in Brest, which has opened a legal clinic. The volunteers take genuine cases encountered by the people they receive, and pass them on to law students for them to examine, under their teachers’ supervision. Whether they involve access to housing, foreigners’ rights, family law, etc. the cases handled allow volunteers to resolve the legal issues raised by people they receive at the reception centres.
Access to housing has always been one of the Secours populaire’s priorities.

While housing is a key factor in professional and social integration, it is also a real problem for many people: working poor, part-time employees, young people, single-parent families, retired people, etc. In our welcome centres, we see that many people don’t exercise their rights, either because they aren’t aware about what options are available, or because they feel overwhelmed by complicated red tape. Rent and utilities are out of many people’s reach and the result is an accumulation of debt; others struggle to find affordable housing and many young people with or without children have to live with their families, some of whom are in financial difficulty themselves. We also welcome people who live in poverty but own dilapidated housing and can no longer pay their energy bills, because the damage to their property is too significant. The SPF must direct them towards social support services to ensure that they benefit from all the rights to which they are entitled, but also to help them in the fight against energy poverty and excess debt by supporting them through the red tape by means of the association’s network of partners: CAF, CCAS, EDF, taking out microloans, etc. At the same time, the SPF strives to stay in contact with homeless people, to help pull them out of extreme instability through street campaigns that provide immediate help. The association can then notify social services and guide the people through the various procedures.
I got to know about the Secours populaire because I’m homeless. The volunteers help us a lot, they support us, give us food... I am very happy to have access to these people, it does me a lot of good.

A stopover for families in Bordeaux.

While there are many places to accommodate poorly housed or homeless people during the day, few are tailored to accommodate families. Given this observation, the volunteers at the Gironde federation of the Secours populaire opened the Escale des Familles family centre in Bordeaux. This warm and welcoming space is open three days a week and takes in parents and children suffering from severe poverty. French lessons are given there for adults while children can enjoy the huge variety of toys and games, or read books from the library under the supervision of volunteers from the association. A laundry room has also been installed to allow homeless people to do their laundry. For families in distress, Escale des Familles is an opportunity for vital relaxation.

In our fight against exclusion, we have made access to healthcare and the right to proper health one of our priorities.

In 2019, 84 Secours populaire federations carried out awareness-raising, prevention and access to health campaigns through their welcome, solidarity and healthcare support centres.

Led by the Médecins du SPF (SPF doctors), volunteer professionals from the medico-social sector, the health centres are set up to welcome, listen and support people in accessing their healthcare rights, and to guide them towards the appropriate services while raising awareness and sharing advice about preventive actions. To improve access for as many people as possible to preventive measures and healthcare in the broadest sense of the term, we draw on local association networks as well as corporate and private partnerships. In rural areas, where medical services are becoming scarce, we are developing our healthcare provision through mobile centres, which get as close as possible to people by offering them material assistance, listening and guidance, as well as eyesight and hearing tests.

Healthcare and prevention must be everyone’s business. We believe that allowing people in difficult situations to regain control over their lives, including their physical and mental health, is a step towards restoring their dignity. This is part of our fight against two-tier medicine and exclusion, and a step closer to “healthcare for all”.

A lack of resources, insufficient information about existing medical services, the list goes on. When people are living with poverty, they often neglect their health. In its welcome, solidarity and healthcare support centres, the Secours populaire strives to find out more about the health of people who come through its doors. Volunteers in Dijon provide guidance and help to raise awareness among those who need it, directing them to the appropriate care facilities. Likewise, a partnership with France’s primary health insurance fund (CPAM) has been established. Volunteers receive information from the CPAM about the healthcare systems to which the people receiving assistance can apply, so that they can exercise their right to healthcare.

Holidays

Everyone should be able to take a holiday.

The Secours populaire has always considered holidays to be a right, a tool for emancipation, a means of bringing popular education to life and an essential element for people’s well-being, especially those whose daily lives are fraught with difficulty. Going on holiday means feeling like everyone else, taking a little time out for yourself, strengthening family ties, bolstering social relationships. It means opening up to the world, discovering new cultures, broadening your horizons and benefiting from these experiences.

Since its creation, the Secours populaire has endeavoured to make it possible for everyone to take a holiday. To achieve this objective, it runs many different campaigns to support children, young people, families, seniors, people with disabilities, isolated people and refugee-migrants and give them unforgettable experiences. It calls upon its solidarity network to step up partnerships so that as many people as possible can create memories by the sea, in the countryside or in the mountains throughout the year. Whether it’s with a holiday host family, at a campsite, in lodges or at copain du Monde villages, there is a programme to suit everyone and ensure that as many people as possible get to experience the joys of taking some time off to enjoy themselves.

In France, one in three children is unable to go on holiday. The Secours populaire is stepping up its initiatives to enable as many people as possible to exercise this right. In Yvelines, 45 children got a chance to take a holiday with a host family. These volunteers take in a child who isn’t able to go on holiday, for a period of one to three weeks. In the Hérault, Hautes-Pyrénées, Corsica and Mayenne, the children from Yvelines were able to discover a new environment, take part in activities that they don’t usually get to do, and above all to make new friends and forge a relationship with their host family. It’s an essential breath of fresh air for children who, on the first day of school, will then have lots of memories to share with their friends.
Leisure, Culture, Sport

Access to sports, culture and leisure is essential for a brighter future.

The Secours populaire has made access to culture one of its essential channels for solidarity. Smiles, sparkling eyes, and treasured memories are essential in the life of every human being. The arts provide an outlet for people to express an emotion, a sensation or an idea without using words. Dancing, singing, drawing and painting give life greater meaning. And that's why we are stepping up our actions to bring culture and art workshops to more and more people. Because giving everyone a chance to express themselves through art means creating potentially life-changing opportunities.

Likewise, access to leisure activities and sports provides an outlet from everyday hardships. The values of sport help to build character: pushing yourself past your own limits, working together, sharing accomplishments and failures... And all this must all be carried out as part of a relationship of equals. Very often we move mountains and clear away obstacles so that the poor can simply be allowed to enjoy life. The lives of the people we help are difficult, so it's important that they be given the right to freedom.
The museum is amazing, I can’t believe it! The guide explained lots of things to us that I didn’t know before, and that I will remember so I can explain them to other people. It has really opened my eyes.

A day of celebrations in Lille with the Pères Noël Verts (Green Father Christmas).

Instability and increasing poverty exclude many poor people from society. This feeling of isolation is particularly prevalent during the Christmas and New Year celebrations, which are normally synonymous with happy memories shared among friends or family. Driven by the idea that everyone should enjoy themselves at this time and escape from a sometimes difficult daily life, the Secours populaire steps up its Pères Noël Verts (Green Father Christmas) campaign during the holidays. In Lille, 440 people were able to make some magical memories. Parents and children were able to take a ride on the big wheel before going to lunch at a restaurant in the city. They wrapped up the day on a cultural note, with an outing to a museum.
France has nearly three million children and adolescents living in poverty. Even though the right to education is guaranteed by the International Convention on the Rights of the Child, poverty leaves certain vulnerable children invisible. The Secours populaire pays careful attention to the education children are entitled to receive; it enables tens of thousands of families to buy school supplies, dress their children properly, ensure they have access to a balanced diet, pay for school lunches, provide academic support, and provide opportunities for children to enjoy sports and culture. The Secours populaire supports children in difficulty and fights to keep them in school. It strives to keep them interested in learning, and involves parents in their children’s experiences, which is the key to successful support. The association provides mediation between families and schools, eliminates obstacles and makes school accessible to those who struggle to attend. The student branches can provide a boost to the most disadvantaged students whose financial distress unfairly undermines their chances of success, by helping them to obtain healthy food, university books, various supplies, and cultural or leisure activities. For adults, the fight against illiteracy involves French lessons or conversational workshops to improve their language skills, both orally and in writing (literacy, teaching French as a foreign language) as well as through social inclusion workshops, sport, culture, and leisure.
What makes me really happy is when I see a student who has just understood a legal concept, and especially when I am successful in encouraging them to learn.

Reading for all at Les Lilas.

Education is one of the main keys to emancipation. The Secours populaire Les Lilas committee in Seine-Saint-Denis has understood this perfectly and decided to focus its actions on support for education and schools. The committee has developed several initiatives, including a library that is open to people supported by the association. Reading workshops also take place each week. On Tuesdays and Fridays for example, pupils aged between 7 and 11 can leaf through books, read or draw in the company of a volunteer team who works with them throughout the year. This initiative is a fun way for children who sometimes have trouble following along in the classroom to learn and experience a normal learning environment.
Socio-professional integration

Access to employment, an essential step towards independence.

Employment is the best way to restore people’s dignity and independence. Secours populaire volunteers work with the people who come to the association for help, and guide them through the various stages towards getting back to work. The association promotes access to rights and sometimes helps to support people as they strive to assert them. We help job seekers to identify their skills and experience in order to create a CV and covering letter. We prepare them for job interviews and through our personal care centres, we provide suitable clothing, in which people can feel good about themselves. No job without transport: the first month’s travel pass is supplied, or help is provided to purchase a bicycle or motor vehicle. We come together to fight against the paradox that resources are required if people want to work. And now there is another layer of difficulty to overcome: job vacancies are almost entirely advertised online. Here again, we work with people to train them and give them access to a computer, a printer, a scanner, etc. taking action to bridge the digital divide. The volunteers channel all the SPF’s resources to support job seekers, providing comprehensive guidance and promoting their return to autonomy. However, today’s job market is mostly unstable, part-time jobs. The fight will only end when people gain access to sustainable employment and a decent salary.
Three years after I arrived in France, I was able to integrate society and obtain legal papers with the help of the Secours populaire. I am now an employee.

The story of Secours populaire is above all about human relationships, bonds of friendship that are forged between people from different countries and different cultures. From there, the Secours populaire facilitators-collectors-volunteers are keen to transmit this same approach wherever they go, so that everyone can play a role and spread solidarity worldwide. Bonds between people create bridges of solidarity in France, Europe and around the world, right now, and for the years to come. With its copain du Monde movement, the Secours populaire helps to make today’s children the instigators and players of solidarity, and to ensure that the citizens of the future are imbued with the values of solidarity. The association fosters friendships with its partners all around the world, and some of these friendships have lasted for decades. Relationships are not a one-way street, but are enhanced by people working together, as the recent example of the Salvadoran partnership attests: a group of rural farmers from El Salvador came to France to share their experience of ecological agriculture with a group of French farmers. We can all learn from each other, and it is our firm belief that collective intelligence has the potential to roll back poverty and misfortune all over the world. Globalising solidarity also means going beyond borders, helping to develop awareness about how urgent it is to take action, to encourage solidarity and mutual aid, and create a massive global solidarity movement. The possibilities we have now can be multiplied on a huge scale in the future, as long as all people, wherever they are, realise that they too can play a role in this solidarity movement. We can certainly move forward quickly alone, but if we all move together, we can go further.

Emergencies

In the very first article of its statutes, the Secours populaire pledges to support people who are victims of natural disasters and armed conflict.

Taking action for solidarity in the aftermath of a tragedy is therefore part of the SPF identity. The year 2019 has brought its fair share of disasters of all kinds, and wars are still raging, affecting millions of human beings on our planet. Faced with emergency situations, the SPF has taken action in Mozambique, Comoros, Lebanon, Italy, Madagascar, Albania and Iran, always coordinating with its partners on site to organise solidarity that is tailored to the needs of those affected. The initiative taken in the Caribbean following the passage of Hurricane Dorian over the Bahamas archipelago is proof of its pledge. The Secours populaire was only able to help thanks to the support of the Madtwoz Family in Saint Martin and the Soleil d’Or in Guadeloupe. Its work would have been impossible without the appeal for financial and material generosity, and the motivation shown by a network of countless people.

“Support for the victims of Cyclone Kenneth in the Comoros

On the night of 24 to 25 April, Cyclone Kenneth hit the Comoros archipelago with winds of up to 280 km/h. Many buildings were destroyed, eight people died and nearly 45,000 were affected. The Secours populaire came to help the victims right away, launching an appeal for solidarity and releasing an emergency fund of €20,000. Along with its partner, the confederation of Djomani associations in France (CADF), the SPF sent a delegation to the area so that the needs could be assessed and emergency assistance could be provided to the affected families. Six thousand people received food packages of rice, flour, sugar, etc.

Europe

Building solidarity both at home and abroad: that was the objective set during the 37th National Congress of the Secours populaire.

The Secours populaire takes action in France and overseas, all over the world, on all continents and of course in Europe, closer to home. Because yes, the situation in Europe, the rise of poverty, the massive arrival of migrant refugees fleeing destitution and war are all issues that concern us. There are now close to 100 million people in Europe living in poverty. Worse still, hunger is increasing on the continent, even though it is one of the richest on the planet. Meanwhile, European food aid is under threat. The Secours populaire and its network of European partner associations, continues taking action. First with people living in poverty, by building solidarity projects in Greece, Italy, Spain, Serbia and so on. But its action with European institutions is also ongoing; the association works with Parliament so that it can make the right decisions in the situation. We have liaised with our government representatives and everyone in power to ensure that poverty cannot grow, and that everyone is focused on improving living conditions. This action is ongoing.

In Georgia, the digital divide is particularly noticeable in rural areas, and has a huge negative impact on students there. As more and more courses are available online, the poorest young people in the most remote regions of the country find themselves at a disadvantage because they don’t have computer equipment or an internet connection. The Rhône federation of the Secours populaire, in partnership with the local association Educare Georgia, is running a digital access project, funding laptops and providing training in computer tools for 15 students from the disadvantaged region of Guria.
Supporting the most vulnerable populations in Greece

For many years, Greece has been enduring the outcomes of two disastrous events. First an unprecedented economic crisis, which began in 2008 and has driven millions of people into unstable situations. Then came a refugee crisis, as the country is one of the gateways to Europe for thousands of families fleeing poverty and war. In the Athens region, the Secours populaire and its local partner, Solidarité populaire - Grèce, are taking action to help the country’s most vulnerable people. They organise regular food parcel distributions for the poorest Greek families and people in refugee camps. At the start of the school year, volunteers distributed school bags to 300 refugee children and Greek families in need.

Massimiliano Bianchini
President of Arci Macerata, Italy

“Working with the Secours populaire, we promote equality and solidarity among young people and run a support programme for refugees in the city of Macerata.”
At the Secours populaire, borders are not obstacles to solidarity.

Whether they are fighting against hunger or poverty, whether they are striving for justice or freedom, whether they come to the aid of displaced people or victims of conflicts, our partners in Africa, just like us, are seeking to make this world a more human place. And that is why we work by their sides, in the long term. We learn from each other, we think together, we move forward together. Africa is still a fragile continent, plagued by a great deal of tension, conflict, difficulties of all kinds, climate change, severe poverty, drought, famine and much more. It is also a young continent with a youthful population, which means that food safety and access to clean water are the most important issues. The association sets up agricultural projects, because rural communities hold the key to meeting these 21st century challenges. School is also an important issue. Unequal access to education affects young girls in particular, and ultimately penalises women. So we are careful to focus on access to education, literacy and income-generating activities that include a training component. Always carried out with a long-term vision in mind, these actions target a single objective: to enable these populations to resolve their own difficulties.
An agricultural cooperative has been founded based on sustainable development

In El Salvador, 19 departmental federations of the Secours populaire are engaged in a sustainable development project which centres on farming organic vegetables and fruits. After the creation of a self-managed cooperative, the Canasta Campesina, around 100 poor, particularly marginalised women and young rural inhabitants can now make a living from their production. They market their produce locally, through a system of baskets inspired by French AMAP organisations. This project has been co-financed by the French Development Agency and has enabled rural families to safeguard a source of food, to increase their income by five times, to increase the rate of schooling for children and give them better access to healthcare.

"Self-sufficiency in terms of food, as well as access to education remain priorities across the continent."

A long presence on the American continent.

For around sixty years, the Secours populaire français has been working with its local partners on the American continent: a land of contrasts and remarkable inequality. In recent years, the Caribbean region has been particularly hit by natural disasters, with a great many people affected by hurricanes of unprecedented magnitude. The Secours populaire responded to emergencies in the area, and, with its local partners, has taken long-term action in the form of many development projects (in Saint Martin, Dominica, Guadeloupe, Cuba, etc.). Self-sufficiency in terms of food, as well as access to education remain priorities across the continent. The projects that draw on the expertise of our local partners in some fifteen countries take their lead from the movement of the population who need them. The copain du Monde children’s programme is especially intense on the continent. Several copain du Monde villages have been set up, and others will be opened up in the coming months. Teaching children about the values of solidarity, sharing, and helping each other means planting seeds in fertile land to build global solidarity, both now and in the future!

Renovating toilets for the gypsy community in Pondicherry

Globally, 4.2 billion people currently live without sanitation. Inadequate sanitation services, unsafe water... a lack of access to toilets causes the death of 432,000 people each year, more than half of whom are children under five years old. With its Indian partner Samugam, the Marne federation of the Secours populaire set up a project in 2019 to renovate toilets for the gypsy population of Pondicherry. 290 people now have access to functioning sanitation facilities, and families now benefit from normal hygiene conditions. As a result, the number of illnesses caused by contaminated water and air has been greatly reduced.

Pondicherry

Asia, a continent of enormous inequality.

Asia is a continent of contrasts. It is constantly developing, and growing richer. However, inequalities are also growing between those who have more than enough and those who have nothing, and poverty affects millions of people. Asia has also seen many natural disasters: earthquakes, typhoons and tsunamis, and these are only going to become more common with climate change. The Secours populaire is taking action to help the people who are affected by these situations. Through our network of partner associations, we can take immediate action after a disaster, as was the case in the Philippines and more recently in Indonesia, after the terrible earthquakes that ripped through several islands. Above all, we run many development projects that are designed to meet the needs of the most vulnerable populations. For example, in 2019 we helped to rebuild schools in Nepal and set up a project to promote access to employment for women. In Vietnam, we are working to develop access to water for rural farming families. In all, we carried out around thirty projects and initiatives in 2019 on the Asian continent.
Strengthening resilience among young people in Palestine

Living conditions for Palestinians in East Jerusalem are particularly difficult. There are insufficient social, health and education services for them, and the high unemployment rate places around 75% of Hierosolymitans below the poverty line. More and more young pupils are dropping out of school and social violence is on the increase as a result of their frustration at an uncertain future. The Secours populaire and its partner, the Medical Relief Society, are leading a project funded by the French Development Agency that aims to bring meaning to the role of young people in society. Training, school presentations, workshops on gender or environmental issues... all these actions have been organised for and by young people, so that they can become key players in the life of the city.

A region torn apart by conflict.

The Middle East has been shaken by multiple humanitarian crises, in particular due to the conflicts that have raged there for many years. The situation in Syria and Iraq, as well as in Palestine, has led to the displacement of millions of families who are fleeing poverty and war. Nearly 1.5 million men, women and children have left their entire lives behind them to seek asylum in Lebanon, a country of only six million inhabitants, which is now facing a huge economic crisis. Alongside its local partners, the Secours populaire works with displaced people and inhabitants living in severe poverty. Its solidarity needs are immense. The development of copain du Monde children’s villages, which host Syrian, Palestinian and French children in places of exceptional beauty, brings hope for the future. The villages also give these young people, who have sometimes been through harrowing experiences, to rediscover what it really means to play and have fun as children.
For the launch of Don’action, volunteers went out collecting in the streets of France.

In 2019, the Secours populaire provided support to more than 3.3 million people.

Over the course of the year, the association had to take even greater measures to combat the deteriorating living conditions endured by many of our fellow citizens. Among them, countless young people are suffering in poverty, and an IPSOS study carried out on behalf of our association shows the extent to which children can be anxious about living in an unstable environment. As we believe that this situation is unacceptable, now more than ever on the 30th anniversary of the UN Declaration of the Rights of the Child, we have ramped up our efforts with the aim of allowing every single child access to education, culture, training, a healthy diet, respect, leisure, and holidays. In a word: happiness. During its 37th National Congress in Perpignan, the Secours populaire decided that it would strive to bring about worldwide and universal solidarity, now and in the future. As a result, its volunteers join forces with partner associations to provide material, human and financial support wherever it is needed, where our brothers and sisters, our fellow humans, are affected by disasters, are victims of violence, poverty or famine, or where children have no access to education or healthcare. The association’s volunteers also take daily action all over France to provide support for every single family and every single individual, wherever they are from, whatever their nationality, so that they can find their place in our society. As a result, they ask for your financial support so that they can carry out their incredible work. And when we took stock of our actions during 2019, we observed an increase in the number of collectors-leaders-volunteers, as well as a rise in the number of donors and the funds we collected. This is a sign of the trust the public places in our work. We are honoured to have this trust and it encourages us to continue the dialogue with our donors, keeping them informed regularly about everything we do and how their donations are used. Well done to all our volunteers: those who give their time to the Secours populaire and those who work for our partners around the world. We would also like to express our sincere thanks to all our donors, our financial partners, our sponsors and supporters for their loyalty and generosity.
In 2019, 91% of the funds raised by means of public donations were used during the year. These financial resources stemming from public generosity represent 31% of the financial resources for the 2019 tax year, as recorded in the company’s income statement. These figures do not include voluntary contributions of material and equipment.

Resources

Resources collected from the public
€28.9 million
These are mainly donations and bequests. Financial gifts or bequests are recorded and monitored so they can be used for whatever specific purpose the donor indicated. If none has been specified, then the SPF can direct the funds to where they are most urgently needed: to carry out social missions, to cover operating costs or to supplement the financing of solidarity actions.

Subsidies and other public aid
€16.5 million
These originate from various sources: local authorities, the government, social organisations or the European Union.

Other private funds
€41.2 million
These are contributions received from companies and foundations (partnerships, sponsorship, etc.), the proceeds collected as a result of initiatives or voluntary fundraising, and the amounts collected from people during our solidarity campaigns.

Other proceeds
€4.8 million
This category mainly includes sales and other proceeds generated by daily management.

Funds and resources carried over from previous years
€2.7 million
This corresponds to allocated resources from previous years that the SPF used in 2018, in accordance with the donor’s wishes that were expressed at the time of the donation.

Employment

In 2019, 66% of the resources received from public generosity were allocated to social missions, 17% to fundraising costs, 15% to fundraising operations and other expenses and 2% to financial investments. These figures do not include voluntary contributions of material and equipment.

Social missions
€ 63.9 million
Social missions are the activities carried out by the structures of the Secours populaire français, in accordance with its statutes. They contribute directly to the initiation and implementation of solidarity in France and abroad; volunteers welcome and provide guidance for people in difficulty, holidays are provided, the Père Noël Verts Green Father Christmas campaign is run, food and clothing distributions are organised, the Journée des oubliés des vacances holiday initiative and copain du Monde villages are run, etc. But these resources also go towards providing emergency relief in France. Solidarity around the world means dealing with emergencies (climate disasters, famine, actions to support refugee migrants) and the many development programmes. Out of a total of €62.2 million in social actions, €18.4 million was financed by public generosity.

Operating costs
€ 14.9 million
The SPF finances its solidarity and health relay centres, where its 80,000 volunteers work throughout France. These costs are restricted to funding solidarity projects, as illustrated by the distribution of uses, whether financial or material (see page 65). Out of a total of €15.8 million, €4.1 million was financed by public generosity.

Commitments to be made on allocated resources
€ 2.8 million
These are donations collected in 2018 that the SPF is committed to using, in accordance with donors’ wishes, as part of planned or ongoing projects.

Surplus funds for the year
€ 5.3 million
This year’s income statement is positive. The SPF is therefore building a working capital reserve to secure the sustainable financing of its missions over the long term.

Fundraising expenses
€ 7.2 million
The cost of appealing for donations from the public includes requests from the major SPF campaigns, bequests, donations, life insurance and emergency calls, especially in the Convergence magazine. Out of a total of €7.2 million, €4.5 million is financed by public generosity.
82.7% of material and financial resources is attributed to social projects.
